Finding error-correcting codes using computers

Clement Lam

Concordia University

Canada

Abstract

The theory of error-correcting codes is a vast and fast-moving area with many open problems. The objective of this paper is to survey where the current boundaries of knowledge are in a few selected areas, by listing the smallest unsolved cases. Our hope is that these lists will motivate further computational to move these boundaries.